WHEN SCHOOL LETS OUT IN JUNE.

I have to go to school in spring—
So much fun there is!
I have to give up summer, too,
I am having to do chores.
Sometimes I want to quit, but Ma
says, "School will be out soon;
It's time enough for you to learn."
I have to go to school in June—
I look out through the window at
The woods all green and cool,
An' wish th' t' was there instead
O' being here in school.
I'd just get to bed at 11 o'clock,
And the school is out for now;
But if Pa knew it'd be dead
When school lets out in June!

I look out through the window at
The woods all green and cool,
An' wish th' t' was there instead
O' being here in school.
I'd just get to bed at 11 o'clock,
And the school is out for now;
But if Pa knew it'd be dead
When school lets out in June!

I wish I was that bumble-bee—
He flew right through th' door
An' out th' window—but I'd never
Find my way back again;
I wouldn't know where to go;
An' feel like a lost soul;
I'd be a long way off from here
When school lets out in June.

WHERE LONDON SLEEPS.

More People Lodge Below Ground Than on the Fourth Floor.

London Mat.

There are over 150 square miles of street in London. Each square mile has an average of 130 streets, and each street has an average of about 10 houses. There are, therefore, over 1,800,000 houses in London.

Of these houses, about half are hotels, apartments, chambers, lodgings-houses, or tenement-houses. A quarter is shops, and a similar number is offices, flats and private houses.

It is interesting to discover where these people sleep, and in order to do so it is necessary to divide the population of London into five classes. These are: Basement, or underground, sleepers; first-floor, second-floor, third-floor and fourth-floor sleepers.

The dwellers in private houses sleep mostly in the second, third and fourth floors. Hardly ever—except, perhaps, one or two of the butlers in the larger houses—sleep in the basement.

Taking the shops and offices, we find that the first and second floors are almost invariably given over to business. In some cases nobody lives on the premises at night, but in others the third and fourth floors may be let as chambers or flats, or maintained as sleeping apartments for the assistants. In the smaller shops the proprietor and his family not infrequently reside in the upper portions of his business premises, and in very large warehouses and shops a housekeeper and his wife may generally be found to utilize the basement of the house for their own habitation.

In the hotel and lodging-house division we find that the rooms on all the floors, except the ground floor, are let to visitors, and are used as sleeping apartments with the utmost impartiality. This does not, however, apply to the fourth floor, to which very few of the houses in this class except the hotels are able to aspire. Although it may sound improbable, it will be found that many more people live in the basements—that is to say, underground—in London than on the four floors above the ground. Stand high in the accompanying stage because the division of fourth floor includes all others of a greater altitude.

Tabulated, this is how the figures for the 1,800,000 houses stand:

Underground	25,000	Sleepers	1,800,000
First floor	416,000
Second floor	400,000
Third floor	300,000
Fourth floor and over	511,000

Total, 1,800,000. It is interesting to observe that the number of persons living in the basements is about four times that of those who sleep on the four floors above the ground. London is, on the whole, a very poor city.

The figures stand high in the accompanying stage because the division of fourth floor includes all others of a greater altitude.

Tabulated, this is how the figures for the 1,800,000 houses stand:

Underground	25,000	Sleepers	1,800,000
First floor	416,000
Second floor	400,000
Third floor	300,000
Fourth floor and over	511,000

Total, 1,800,000.

In addition, the number of persons who sleep in a house—we get the startling figures of 64,000, or nearly 300,000 underground sleepers. What will their condition be under atmospheric conditions such as we have recently had thrust upon us?

The latest census taken at Cynthia shows a population of 3,371.

The next reunion of the Confederate Veterans will be held at Louisville.
